

Postcards from Paris, Valdosta
after Slaverio

Postcard manifesto of our history without applause. If we excavate, we unearth this hidden thing—police chief, townspeople constructing parade floats bound by fire cord. Henry Smith was exhibited, swinging eye sockets singed in oilslicked blaze.

A portrait of American past.

Plate glass, silver salts. The pop of flashbulb after picnic jubilee—

these straw-hatted men pose with trophy, cooling ashes. The sneer with incisors captured in sepia tones. Only the tangible doesn't lie. Teeth and bones in children's pockets.

And Mary Turner, tied upside a poplar tree not unlike a bursting poppy.

She twisted, skin-slouched, knife-slit
a vacated cavity between her hipbones.

Theirs is the history we were taught to forget.

Toxic voiceless paper—
hush and hushed.
